Jack and Jill

I met Jack and Jill halfway up the hill Their pail was empty; mine was full. We smiled at each other and exchanged polite words. That was all. I could never be rude to two of the most hardworking siblings in the village. everyone admired them. They were always neatly dressed and well-mannered

I had no idea what would happened next. i can't say what time it was either. All I can say is: Once I had passed them along the way, I fell in amazement at three beautiful Blue morpho butterflies. They danced in and around a number of yellow daffodils. The contrast between the two colours was amazing. I thought, maybe I should memorize what I saw. as soon as I reach home I should draw and paint what I saw.

While I was thanking nature for this wonderful inspiration, I heard a loud tumble and a crash. When I looked up, I saw jack on his back, the pail of water at his side, and the ground soaked. Jill was rolling and when she reach Jack's feet she stop. Jack's hand was on his head covering a terrible bruise.

I was stunned. I proceeded towards the unfortunate duo. I was still carrying my pail. I hardly reached Jack, when he sprang to his feet and dashed down the hill towards his home beyond the ribbon of trees. Jill lay on the ground astonished.

“Are you alright, jill ” I shouted.

When I got to her, she recovered with a blink of an eye and exclaimed, “I believe Jack broke his crown.” And there it was. Jack's crown. I never noticed it on his head. She dismissed my help and with obvious concern followed her injured brother home.
